

An ideal father

A traditional nuclear family with the father having primary responsibility for the well-being of the household. The mother has day-to-day responsibility for the care of the house and details of raising the children.

But the father has primary responsibility for setting overall family policy, and the mother's job is to be supportive of the father and to help carry out the father's views on what should be done. Ideally, she respects his views and supports them.

Father's job is to support his family and protect it from evils

An ideal father, without dressing his child, is morally strong, self-disciplined, frugal, temperate, and restrained.

He has the contribution in value of his children to support and protection, the father's primary duty is to tell his children what is right and wrong, punish them when they do wrong, and to bring them up to be self-disciplined and self-reliant. .

In this way, he teaches his children to be self-disciplined, industrious, polite, trustworthy, and respectful of authority.

The reasons that I believe this about a father is that my father, who is a man with a great personality and great thoughts, taught me discipline and importance of life.

Father has a great responsibility to prepare his children on their future and also trained and instructed his child to his best capacity.

Some fathers are physically present but emotionally distant. Some relationships are full of strife. Everyone has a father, even if he is not "ideal" in our conventional sense of fatherhood.

A model father has the responsibility to socialize the children and this makes him to be an affective father.

The reasons for an ideal father is that children need models to develop an adequate conception.

The strict father provides naturalness and expresses his devotion to his family by supporting and protecting them.

In conclusion my opinion is that a father is a model for his children. It says that the way to raise a child to be responsible to others is through discipline.